Search Of A Woman: In A Short Character Who Lie To Themselves As Well As Others, How Does Arthur Miller Present The Theme Of Deceit Within The Play?

'Search of a Woman' was written by Arthur Miller in 1949. It is set in the American south of Boston and New York during the 1930's great depression. The American great depression was the greatest economic collapse in the modern world. Millions and millions closed their doors, people lost their jobs, homes, and savings, and many depended on charity to survive. Through this the 'American Dream' was crushed - the idea of 'pulling' up, when every man owns a business and has the perfect family with the perfect house.

'Search of a Woman', with the story of a struggling salesman, Willy Loman, who experiences frustration and failure as he returns upon his 63rd. In the play Arthur Miller tries to present the theme of dishonesty by the means of his characters, language and the stage directions.

The characters in the play are important in showing the theme of dishonesty. One of the main characters in the play is Willy Loman, who is a struggling salesman. He is a man who is going to be looking at home and how dishonesty is represented through them. The main characters in the play present the theme of self-deception in which the men try to convince the truth, usually because it seems to be painful and difficult for them to handle. They also lie to each other. The main characters in the play are Willy Loman, his wife, Linda, and his two sons Biff and Happy.

Willy, I will be focusing on the most central character in the play, Willy Loman. Miller presents the theme of dishonesty through Willy very early in the play. Willy lies about his job to most people including his family. He lies about his earnings to Linda "I did five hundred gross in Providence and seven hundred gross in Boston." We later find out in the play that this is a lie and that he doesn't even go on commission for most of his work. The closest to the reader that Willy himself comes to is in his dying and relies on these lies to give a false impression of his earnings and keep his family happy in the belief that they are financially secure.

Willy also lies to Linda. We find out in the play that Willy is having an affair with an unknown woman. He doesn't let Linda know she is the woman he will turn to as he continues to love Linda. "You're my foundation and my support, Linda." In this one Linda doesn't know anything about the affair and continues to love Willy. This is another example of how Arthur Miller presents dishonesty within the play.

Willy also lies to himself. We find out in the play that Willy is having an affair with an unknown woman. He doesn't let Linda know she is the woman he will turn to as he continues to love Linda. "You're my foundation and my support, Linda." In this one Linda doesn't know anything about the affair and continues to love Willy. This is another example of how Arthur Miller presents dishonesty within the play.
